ZOOM VIDEO COMMUNICA-TIONS is eliminating 15% of its workers as the service that became ubiquitous during the pandemic adapts to slower growth.

The company will cut about 1,300 jobs as part of a restructuring, chief executive officer (CEO) Eric Yuan said on Tuesday in a blog post. Yuan called himself "accountable" for the company's issues and said he would reduce his salary and forgo his

"Our trajectory was forever changed during the pandemic," Yuan said, adding that Zoom headcount tripled in two years. "We didn't take as much time as we should have to thoroughly analyse our teams or assess if we were growing sustainably." The reductions are a bigger share of the workforce than cuts announced at enterprise software companies, including Salesforce, Microsoft and Workday. The shares gained 9.9% to close at $84.66 in New York, the biggest single-day jump in three months. Despite Tuesday's rise, the stock has plummeted 85% from an alltime high in October 2020 and is now at pre-pandemic levels.

While people and businesses continue to rely on Zoom in post-pandemic life, the "uncertainty of the global economy" is affecting customers, Yuan said. After gaining millions of users at the height of the pandemic, Zoom is now trying to reverse slowing growth by expanding its tools for business.

Still, it has reported singledigit revenue increases for the last two quarters, and analysts project that sales have continued to decelerate in the current quarter. The cuts are likely a bid to preserve or improve margins in the face of slowing growth, wrote Bloomberg Intelligence analyst John Butler.

In an interview with Bloomberg last month, President Greg Tomb acknowledged the competition, but said companies using Zoom rarely quit the platform. Tomb added the company's biggest opportunity is getting existing customers using the rest of its portfolio, which includes tools such as the Zoom phone service.

Yuan, the founder of the San Jose, California-based company, said his base salary, which was $301,731 last year, will be cut 98% and he will give up a corporate bonus for the current fiscal. His total compensation for fiscal 2022 was $1.1 million, according to a May 2022 regulatory filing. Others on the executive leadership will take 20% base salary reductions.

EXPLAINER

FPI TAXATION AND BORROWING COSTS

Foreign portfolio investors (FPIs), who are enjoying a concessional tax rate of 5% on the interest income of rupeedenominated bonds, could be staring at a higher tax outgo after June 30, 2023, since the Centre has not extended the concessional rate. Ashley Coutinho takes a closer look at the issue and the likely fallout

Lower tax rate for FPIs

FPIS HAVE hitherto enjoyed a lower tax deductible at source (TDS) rate or withholding tax of 5% on the interest earned on rupee-denominated bonds issued by Indian firms and government securities. This was made applicable from 2013, under Section 194LD of the Income Tax Act.

The Centre had introduced the lower tax rates in 2013 after a wobble in the rupee led to a flight of foreign money. These were applicable on interest payable till May 31, 2015. Record FPI inflows in the debt segment in 2014 prompted the Centre to extend the concession thrice in later years. The lower rate is seen as a significant contributor to the Indian debt market's attractiveness for overseas investors. It has also reduce borrowing costs for the government and firms.

$1.5 bn

FPIs' NET SELLING OF INDIAN DEBT IN CALENDAR YEAR 2022

₹2.4 trillion

FPIASSETS IN THE INDIAN DEBT MARKET AS ON DECEMBER 2022

Likely new rates

ITWAS widely expected that the sunset period for the concessional rate would get extended by another three years—a year at the very least. However, Budget FY24 had no announcement to this effect, which meant that the tax rate is now likely to go up to 20% plus applicable surcharge and education cess. Those availing the benefit of tax treaties may pay a lower 10% or 15%, depending on the treaty jurisdiction.

Overseas investors in the corporate debt market generally invest for longer tenures and look for certainty on tax consequences. Let's say an FPI invests in a ₹1,000-bond with a coupon rate of 10% per annum. If ₹100 is the interest received, the 5% withholding tax reduces the income to ₹95. Given a hedging cost of, say, 4% per annum on the principal, the FPI gets back ₹55. If tax deducted, however, increases to 20%, this income reduces to ₹40, which is lower by 27%.

What will be the impact on FPIs THIS WILL significantly impact FPI debt investments as there is no grandfathering of existing investments, though there is a likelihood that impacted parties will approach the authorities for a grandfathering provision. Overseas investors in the corporate debt market invest for longer tenures and look for tax certainty vis-a-vis expected income during the period. The higher tax could accelerate selling of such bonds before June by FPIs who do not want to pay higher tax.

In the context of hardening bond yields globally, the impact of this change might negatively affect investments. FPIs were net sellers of debt papers worth $1.5 billion in CY22, in addition to $16.5 billion sold in equities. The previous year, they were net buyers in Indian debt to the tune of $3 billion. In the past five years, however, FPIs have cumulatively net sold in excess of $10 billion of Indian debt.

How will corporates get impacted

FPIs MAY look to pass on the additional tax burden to the companies they lend to. This will result in the spread going up for some corporates, especially those that are struggling to get money from the domestic market.

These corporates will be compelled to buy from foreign investors, who can then negotiate for better rates. Some foreign lenders pass on the tax cost to the Indian borrowers by making it part of the commercial agreement. It will get a lot more difficult to negotiate for higher coupons from top-rated corporates and public sector undertakings. "In some cases, FPIs pass on the tax to borrowers and in other cases they bear the cost. In the case of the former, there is no additional cost for FPIs despite the higher tax," said a tax expert. The majority of FPI debt investment, however, is in Indian government securities, where coupons cannot be negotiated.

Companies will have the option to borrow from foreign investors in the debt market, through foreign currency denominated bonds for which grandfathering provisions are provided. The other option is FPIs investing through the GIFT IFSC route, under which a 10% rate is applicable, along with cess and surcharge.
